Ferocious Hurricane Ike slammed into Houston early Saturday morning as a powerful Category 2 hurricane. Both the CSI Software corporate office and the data center located near the Intercontinental airport survived unscathed.

“Hurricane Ike was a major test for our data center” says Jonathan Ross, President and CEO of CSI Software. “The eye of the hurricane actually passed right over the facility early Saturday morning and even though it lost electricity, all of the emergency backup systems kicked in and there was no interruption of service for any of our customers.”

The CSI Software corporate office suffered no damage or loss of power and reopened for business on Tuesday, September 16.
